Josh Appignanesi directs this indie comedy. 105 minutes. Adult content.

When Rochel (Zoe Lister Jones) and Nasira (Francis Benhamou) -- an Orthodox Jew and a Muslim, respectively -- meet as new teachers at a Brooklyn school, co-workers and students expect friction. NEW! Food For Thought: A Sustainability Movie Series

Once a month, join your hosts Andrea and Josh Shupack eating & watching films about food. Each film illuminates different deep & complicated issues around food & sustainability. Why are these Jewish issues, and what can we do about them? We'll explore these questions and many more through these captivating & inspiring films. These films will shock and challenge, but they will also offer many positive solutions and inspire us to make change and work towards Tikkun Olam, healing the world. Each film has something important to offer, and is guaranteed to give a lot of food for thought. The evenings will also include a related food tasting, and an organized discussion following the film. There is no cost to attend any of the films, but a suggested donation of $5 per film is much appreciated to cover the cost of purchasing licenses to show the films publicly, and for food.
